Calgary police seek kidnapper

Man believed to be connected to alleged attack on Saturday morning

The Calgary Police Service is asking for the public's help in locating a man believed to be connected to an alleged kidnapping that occurred early Saturday morning.

At approximately 6:30 a.m. on Saturday, police responded to a call from a man who reported that he had been tied up and held at gunpoint earlier that morning.

The victim managed to escape in a vehicle but believed he was being followed by his kidnappers.

Officers were able to locate the victim and the Guns and Gangs Unit began an investigation that led to one individual being taken into custody and warrants being issued for another.

Taxi company uses fake cab for anti-Uber campaign

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

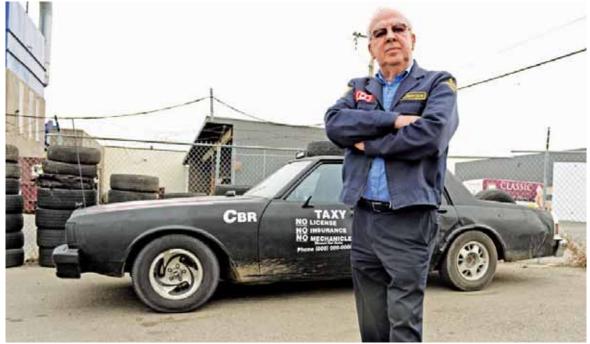

Uber is so last week — or that's what a Calgary Taxi company is hoping.

Meet CBR (cy-hoo-br) the latest Transportation Network Company in Calgary complete with zero licensing, no insurance and no mechanical inspections. The letters CBR don't stand for any-

The all-black sleek vehicle can be used as both a "Taxy" and sedan with its tinted back windows. One of the passenger doors won't open, but that's why you have two, right? For safety, there are two spare tires and your driver goes the same speed as that of the rest of the traffic — because he doesn't have a speedometer.

Roger Richard, owner of Associated Cabs, put the wreck on the road as a tongue-in-cheek awareness campaign of what he feels Uber is doing as it offers its ride-sharing program in the city while skirting taxi regulations.

When you have an unregulated service, it could be anything, who knows what you're going to get," said Roger Richard, owner of Associated Cabs. "If we all did that, what would happen, there would be chaos, so why is (Uber) allowed to operate today?"

Associated Cab owner Roger Richard stands in front of the CBR, a fake "bandit cab" that serves as a cautionary tale of what he says can happen when a city's bylaws aren't enforced. HELEN PIKE/ METRO

After over a week with no city action, the Associated Cab boss said enough is enough.

Although driving this beater around looks like a laugh, and garners a lot of ogles from other motorists, the message behind the outrageous "bandit cab" is much more serious.

"Uber started, what, eight days ago now? And there's promises that (the city) is looking to do something but nothing has happened yet," said Richard. "Do we have a bylaw today, yes or no? If we do enforce it, otherwise we don't have a bylaw.'

He added whatever the city decides to do is fine, but he and his drivers want a level playing field.

Since its launch, Über has issued a release calling Calgary's adoption of the transportation method "one of the most successful market introductions" in North America.

Although the company hasn't disclosed how many trips patrons are taking, they divulged the app has been opened over 85,000 times with tens of thousands signing up.

Associated Cabs took the weekend to prepare a letter of notice they plan on serving the city Monday.

"They've got to live up to their obligation," said Richard. "If we need to take further action on it we'll see what the response is."

Richard said the Über service is already affecting drivers, and waiting for the city to pull through with ticketing those against the bylaw isn't an option for them.

"The drivers are being affected today, I don't like it, I don't appreciate it," said Richard. "After eight days something should have been done."

Police say men posed as officers

Jeremy For Metro | Calgary

Calgary police have arrested three men who allegedly impersonated peace officers in the city's northeast Saturday night.

Police said the three men were driving around the Beddington, Harvest Hills and North Haven areas in a grey Dodge around 11 p.m., using a flashing strobe light to pull over three vehicles, police said.

Police said the men then demanded money from the victims, one of whom was assaulted and robbed.

Police said it tracked the perpetrators' vehicle to the Beddington Heights area. Charges are pending, according to Det. Lawrence Mooney.

The law requires that members of the public pull over when approached by a police vehicle flashing its lights behind them, but police reminding the public to be safe,

"If you're going to be stopped by a marked (police car), you need to obey those conditions," Mooney said. "But if you have doubts, and the car is unmarked and the person is not in uniform, then you can position yourself where you can both drive to a police station.

You can ask for the person's badge and ID and call 911 if you're not sure, Mooney added.

Brad Ferguson

Metro | Edmonton An expected job tax credit in the NDP's first budget this week already has its doubters in the business community. The NDP campaigned on a tax credit to employers who hire new staff, which it argued would help create 27,000 jobs. The plan, as outlined in the party's platform, would rebate up to 10 per cent of What we don't need Chamber of a new employee's salary at a cost of $89 million to the government.

Premier Rachel Notley would not confirm what will be in Tuesday's budget, but hinted strongly she would follow through with the promise. "We did talk about that kind of plan in our platform and we have been quite committed to following as much of the platform as we can," she said. "I would suggest you stay tuned."

Edmonton Economic Development Corporation president Brad Ferguson said he doubts the credit will have any impact on hiring.

"As a business owner, you make decisions based on the needs of the business, not because of a 10 per cent tax rebate," he said.

Ferguson said hiring has actually been on the rise in Alberta over the last few months and the program is simply not needed.

"We have a great workforce here in Alberta and smart competitive business owners.' Alberta Commerce president Ken Kolby complimented the government for the economic diversity ministry it launched Thursday.

He said the job tax credit is an interesting idea, but the details will be important.

"It all depends on what are the details of the program and I don't expect all of them to be released until maybe a week after the budget," he said. "We are willing to take a wait-andsee-look at it.

Crosses go up to honour fallen soldiers

For Laura Vanderkruk, organizing volunteers to set up the 3,200 memorial crosses on Memorial Drive to honour Southern Alberta's veterans has become a way of keeping her family close.

George Bittman, Vanderkruk's father, was a navy veteran who helped organize the project until his death in 2011. For the past few year's, Vanderkruk has taken over the project as a way of connecting to the projects, and now her children have gotten involved, as a way of connecting to their mother.

Vanderkruk said her father joined the navy at the age of 19.

"The navy became his home, because he had a really rough childhood and was sort of displaced," she recalled. "He al-ways felt like they were his first family.'

David Howard, chair of the Field of Crosses Memorial Project, said when the project started seven years ago, they only had 600 crosses on the ground. It's thanks to families like Vanderkruk's that the project has expanded so greatly — Howard said every year families of veterans come forward with information about their parents and grandparents that served, asking if a cross can be erected for them as well.

Murray McCann, who originally came up with the idea for the project, said that Canadians owe a great deal to veterans who gave their lives.

"I think you only have to look across the river at this dynamic city where you can be anything you want to be," he said, standing off Memorial Drive amid the crosses, and pointing across the Bow River to downtown Calgary. "Where you can raise children in freedom. Somebody paid a price, somebody went off to war and didn't come back, because they loved their children and they loved their freedoms."

But for living veterans, Howard said respect needs to be paid as well. He pointed out that many veterans today return home with post traumatic stress disorder, which makes it hard for them to find work and drives them into poverty.

"There's truly no excuse for someone that put their life on the line to be living in poverty. It's sad," he said.

Howard said people can help by donating to the Veterans' Food Drive through canadianlegacy.org.

The crosses will be on display until Nov. 11.

Exhibit hopes to connect Calgarians with migrants

On Salima Stanley-Bhanji's last day in Jordan, after spending weeks talking with Syrian refugees about their experiences, one of her translators opened up about his own life experience as a Syrian refugee.

Rather than conduct the interview herself, Bhanji asked one of her other translators, also from Syria, to ask the questions.

"The dialogue we saw between these two Syrian refugees, who didn't know each other prior to this, was just so remarkable," she said. "Afterwards, we asked the interviewer how it felt for him to ask questions and to receive those answers from a position similar to him.

"He said, 'You know, when I hear these stories, my skin begins to crawl and I feel like I'm going to lose control.' And at that point he began to tear up. This is a 22-year-old, really cool guy, who excused himself. It's a hard exchange to be able to convey, but it was really powerful to see how war emotionally impacts people.'

Beginning in September, Bhanji, the CEO of the Calgary Centre for Global Community, spent time in Bangladesh and Jordan, gathering people's life experiences on camera with cinematographer Eduardo Bunster. Bhanji plans to use the interviews to create a multimedia exhibit here in Calgary. She obtained a pair of shoes from a number of her subjects, and plans to create a space where someone can literally step into another person's shoes, put on a pair of headphones and experience their story.

"As human beings, we tend to be more oriented towards our immediate environment," she explained. "Sometimes it's difficult to envision what it's like in another place, what people are like, and really feel the challenges people have in different parts of the world."

Bhanji hopes the project will help connect Calgarians to people on the other side of the world, and help dispel some myths and misconceptions about

"There is this massive cloak over the people in that region where people in the west have a level of fear and misunderstanding," she said.

She hopes to open the exhibit next year, and is currently looking for a venue to host it.

Local medical marijuana clinic hopes to grow

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

One of Calgary's medical marijuana clinics is hoping to expand shop, after seeing more interest from investors since the Liberals were elected to power last week.

But according to the City of Calgary, don't expect weed dispensaries to bud anytime soon.

"Our Plan B was to open up dispensaries and now that's an actual reality — it opens up our patient base," said Jeff Mooij, owner of the 420 Clinic.

The 420 Clinic isn't the only place to pique investors' interests: After the Liberals swept to power, companies such as Canopy Growth Corp. saw its share spike by more than 21 per cent on the TSX.

420 Clinic's Jeff Mooij has seen more interest from investors since the Liberals won a majority government last week. JEREMY SIMES/FOR METRO

In early October, the city had been looking at ways to properly classify, manage and regulate Calgary's medical marijuana clinics to handle the future growth of such businesses.

During a city council session that month, city planners were told to figure out

People aren't going to do what we're doing.

Jeff Mooij, owner of 420 Clinic where future medical marijuana clinics should be zoned — community members were concerned the clinics would become full-fledged pot shops if laws allowed for it, said city planner Laurie Kimber.

The 420 Clinic in Inglewood won't turn into a dispensary, Mooij assured, adding there's no point for the city to create a new classification system for medical pot clinics.

"A new classification for (medical marijuana) clinics is a moot point," he said. "People aren't going to do what we're doing — they'd rather start up a dispensary when the law allows for it."

Still, planners will continue to determine a proper classification and zoning system for medical marijuana clinics, Kimber said, adding much won't change anytime soon.

"There won't be any immediate ramifications," he said. "Until we see what comes from the federal government and the province, we won't make any changes."

Prime minister-designate Justin Trudeau has said he wants to implement a model that makes it harder for teens to access pot, which also keeps profits away from organized crime.

If a liquor-store model is implemented, marijuana advocates expect the provinces to play a part in lawmaking, where some may create publicor private-store models.

Scans on hold this week

Alberta Health Services' cyclotron is down for at least another week.

The device is used to make a radioactive dye necessary for PET scans and some CT scans. Its breakdown has led to delays for some Alberta patients who need the scans.

In a statement released Friday, AHS said it is taking every possible step to fix the cyclotron as soon as possible.

Since the breakdown, AHS has been able to obtain radioactive material from other provinces, allowing some patients to still have their scans.

On Oct. 21, AHS said staff are completing 13 out of the usual 19 scans in Calgary each day, while in Edmonton, 23 out of the usual 30 scans are completed daily.

AHS will repay out-of-town patients for travel and accommodation costs they incur due to rescheduled appointments.

On its website, AHS apologized to patients and their families for the inconvenience.

Woman hopes book is just as magical as the popular movie

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

Kim Smith was a little nervous taking on the task of illustrating the Christmas classic Home Alone for Quirk Books.

"It's such a popular story," she said. "To make it my own but also something relatable to readers was a bit challenging, which made me nervous.

The book Home Alone replicates the movie, following eight-year-old troublemaker Kevin McCallister, whose wish to see his family disappear comes true.

Kevin's parents accidentally leave for Christmas vacation without him and, as a result, Kevin must defend his home from two burglars.

Smith said she wanted to capture that "golden age" or 1950s feel, while maintaining the classic look of the characters.

"I wanted the heart of the film to show through the book to create that magic that the movie had," she said.

Although Smith is a fan of the movie and knows it well, she said she had to do a bit of research to ensure every illustration replicated the movie.

For example, when Kevin rummages through Buzz's private chest, she made sure the creepy" photo of Buzz's girlfriend and his candy bars were illustrated.

"I hope people get some laughs," she said. "It's a holiday classic every year."

First part of trail to Cochrane complete

The first section of a trail that will eventually link Calgary and Cochrane has been completed.

The 2.2-kilometre Bearspaw Trail links the western boundary of Calgary's Haskayne Park with Michael's Creek in Glenbow Ranch Provincial Park.

Work on the City of Calgary's connection to Glenbow Ranch Provincial Park is slated to begin in 2016. Access to the City of Calgary from the provincial park through Haskayne Park will be on hold until the City's pathway system is complete.

The Bearspaw Trail features native grasslands along the north bank of the Bow River. Eventually the regional pathway is expected to give hikers, runners and cyclists a connection between the city and its neighbour to the north.

Funding for this section of Glenbow Ranch Provincial Park's pathway system was led by the Glenbow Ranch Park Foundation. A major campaign brought in almost $200,000.

Additional grants came from all levels of government, and several not-for-profit organizations, according to a release from Glenbow Ranch Park Foundation. METRO

Lack of federal funds forces CUIA to close its doors

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

After 16 years of providing a space for stakeholders in Calgary's aboriginal community, the Calgary Urban Aboriginal Initiative (CUAI) will be closing its doors come December.

Christy Morgan, executive director at CUAI, said there's no sustainable funding secured from the federal government to keep the organization afloat.

She said the federal funding amounts — which stem from the Urban Aboriginal Strategy — for future years haven't been confirmed, meaning CUAI can't guarantee to other funders that it will have enough money to operate adequately for the next fiscal year.

And, even if the newly elected Liberals could provide that funding, CUAI would've needed it months ago — by the time a new budget rolls out, the organization will be well into its next fiscal year.

"It's just rotten timing," Morgan said. "It sucks — if we had more time to work with, we might not be in this situation."

In fact, CUAI was in a similar situation in January 2014, where it was waiting on the feds to renew confirmed funding.

ing.
During a city council committee meeting that year, Mayor Naheed Nenshi said it would be "really awful" to lose what he called a "good program."

But all of CUAI's domains — or dedicated groups that address specific issues — will continue to meet, she said.

It'll be like "CUAI 2.0," she said. "This phase of having a central space with co-ordinators is done. Now it's like we're in the next phase, and it's time for the community to take it on."

The city has supported the initiative with office space and in-kind donations while the feds provide most of its operating money with an $185,000 annual grant. The province gives about $100,000 per year.

CUAI will hold a round dance on Dec. 12 to commemorate the closure. The organization has allocated about $2.9 million in funding to 118 projects dedicated to Calgary's urban aboriginal community.

Trudeau victory 'best news' for Notley

Alberta Premier Rachel Notley campaigned for NDP compatriot Tom Mulcair during the federal election, but one Alberta political watcher said she may secretly be happy with last Monday's result.

Jim Lightbody, a political science professor and expert in Canadian politics at the University of Alberta, said Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau's majority is "the best news of the election" for Notley.

"He has the political platform that's similar to Notley on oil," Lightbody said, adding Trudeau's concerns on many social issues are also in line with Notley's.

But it's Trudeau's pledge to run federal deficits to create economic stimulus that Lightbody sees linking Notley to Trudeau. "They talk the same kind of language on investing in economies and debt," he said.

After last Monday's election, the idea of Western alienation in Canada's political system became a talking point. Concern over Western Can-

Concern over Western Canada's place in Confederation helped the Reform Party take shape, leading to the rise of former prime minister Stephen Harper.

The fact Trudeau is the son of former Liberal prime minister

Pierre Trudeau, who antagonized the oil patch in the 1980s with his National Energy Policy, added to recent discussion that alienation could return.

But Lightbody said Trudeau is a much different man than his father and the world is a different place now.

"It comes up every so often from the old goats in the Conservative Party." he said of the National Energy Policy and belief in western alienation. "That was 33 years ago."

Cabinet history in the works

Each day this week, Metro is taking an in-depth look at some of the immediate items on prime minister-designate Justin Trudeau's to-do list. Today, we examine his promise to have gender parity in cabinet.

Justin Trudeau made one of his more striking campaign promises on a hot mid-June day when he was still in third

"My Liberal cabinet," he said, "will have an equal number of men and women."

The time has come to appoint that cabinet, one of the most important tasks for the prime ministerdesignate's transition team. If he keeps his promise on Nov. 4, his will be the first Canadian cabinet in history to feature gender parity.

"I think it's smart politically, I think it's actually doable and it's a good idea," said University of Ottawa political-science professor Caroline Andrew, director of the school's Centre on Governance.

Choosing a cabinet is a delicate process involving many considerations, including region, language and political experience.

Outgoing prime minister Stephen Harper's final 39-person cabinet included 12 women (about 30 per cent). That was a higher proportion than the overall House of Commons, which had only 25 per cent female members of Parliament.

Trudeau has set the bar higher, which "gives him the opportunity to dig a little bit deeper into his women's caucus," said Nancy Peckford, national spokes-

Fifty Liberal women were electeď on Monday, 42 of whom are first-time MPs.

"We think he will have no trouble finding highly-qualified, talented women to fill those posts," Peckford said.

When Trudeau made the announcement in June, some critics said Trudeau should just pick his cabinet regardless of gender and was compromising the possibility of appointing ministers on merit alone.

Peckford said that argument "bogus, quite frankly."

'This is not a quota. This is a commitment to equality," she said. "We don't buy the argument at all that it will somehow limit his choices any more than any other consideration.

Among some good bets for a spot at the cabinet table: former editor and author Chrystia Freeland, former Assembly of First Nations B.C. regional chief Jody Wilson-Raybould, international trade lawyer and former UN adviser Catherine McKenna, Oxford-educated lawyer Mélanie Joly and former Newfoundland and Labrador cabinet minister Judy Foote.

Peckford said the promise is a positive signal to all 50 women in Trudeau's caucus, regardless of whether they're in cabinet, that he very much wants to value their voices and ensure they are able to make the best contribution possible.

Large turnout shows resolve to be heard

Aboriginal activists who spent months mobilizing First Nations communities say Conservative Prime Minister Stephen Harper's attempt to disenfranchise aboriginal voters backfired and fuelled turnout so high that some reserves ran out of ballots.

Some aboriginal communities saw voter turnout spike by up to 270 per cent in the Oct. 19 election despite the Fair Elections Act which made it harder for someone to vote without approved identification.

In the riding of Kenora, which includes 40 First Nations in northern Ontario, voting on the reserves was up 73 per cent—almost 3,000 voters. At least four of those First Nations ran out of ballots and either used photocopies or waited for more to be brought in.

"It was so heartening to see,"

said Tania Cameron, a driving force in getting those people out to the polls — many for the first time — both in Ontario and across Canada.

The band councillor in Dalles First Nation started up First Nations Rock the Vote on Facebook and organized countless "ID clinics" where people could see if they were registered or had the required identification to cast a ballot. Others started up similar chapters across the country.

A record 10 aboriginal MPs were elected when the Liberals swept to power Monday, ending the Conservative rule of almost a decade. IAlthough Elections Canada has not calculated national aboriginal voter turnout yet, chiefs say the election "awoke a sleeping giant" amongst a usually quiet electorate.

Leah Gazan, a First Nations activist and education instructor at the University of Winnipeg, said the turnout was a direct reaction to the divisive tactics of the Harper government.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

National anti-violence strategy in works

It's alleged that Basil Borutski drove across the Ottawa Valley, shooting women he knew. When it was over, three were dead, and Borutski, a 57-yearold with a record of violence, was charged with their murders.

Advocates have been saying that at-risk women shouldn't have to wait for the next killing

ing.
"Every time we hear of another woman who's been murdered ... the shock factor goes up, but then it quickly goes back down," Lise Martin, the executive director of the Canadian Network of Women's Shelters & Transition Houses, said in an interview in mid-September, before the killings.

"We need a co-ordinated approach to the issue, (one) that's going to address the whole continuum of violence against women."

In February, the organization published its own blueprint for "a coherent, coordinated, well-resourced" national plan calling for action across four areas: prevention, support services, justice reform and social policies.

With a new government coming to power in Ottawa, the idea of a comprehensive national strategy may have a better chance of becoming reality.

The Liberal party announced a plan to create a national "gender-violence strategy," including training for law enforcement, rooting out harassment in the armed forces and increasing penalties for convicted abusers. The party also campaigned on providing funding to women's shelters as part of a plan to spend almost $20 billion on social infrastructure over 10 years.

Leaders lash out over handling of massive influx

European leaders lashed out Sunday at each other's handling of the continent's greatest immigration crisis since World War II, even as they came together to seek ways to ease the plight of the tens of thousands marching across the Balkans toward the European Union's heartland.

At a hastily called emergency summit in Brussels, 11 EU and Balkan leaders were especially looking to shore up Greece's porous border with Turkey and slow the flow of people heading north toward the European Union's heartland.

"Extraordinary times demand extraordinary measures," German Chancellor Angela Merkel said.

Nearly 250,000 migrants have passed through the Balkans since mid-September and the surge is not being deterred by either cold weather or colder waters off Greece.

Croatia said 11,500 people crossed into the country Saturday, the highest in a single day since Hungary put up a fence and refugees started coming into Croatia in mid-September.

Slovenian Prime Minister Miro Cerar said his tiny Alpine nation was being overwhelmed by the refugees - with 60,000 arriving in the last 10 days - and was not receiving enough help from its EU partners.

He put the challenge in simple terms: if no fresh approach is forthcoming "in the next few days and weeks, I do believe that the European Union and Europe as a whole will start to fall apart."

Serbian Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic asked a fundamental question that the 28-nation bloc and non-EU nations like Serbia have been unable to answer since the migratory trek across the Mediterranean and through Turkey started last spring: "What we are going to do with hundreds of thousands of these people?"

Sunday's meeting was hoping to come up with some Band-Aid solutions at best. Greek Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras commented that having a summit on the migrant crisis was of little use if Turkey was not invited.

Many say the EU needs to get control of the refugee flow at the bloc's external border between EU-member Greece and Turkey.

Migration experts, however, say the flood of refugees won't be halted until the world resolves the war in Syria, which is driving millions out of the Vucic said he was prepared for "hard, not very pleasant" talks. He said Serbia would not "put up any walls" like Hungary's new razor wire-topped border fences.

Croatian Prime Minister Zoran Milanovic asked of fellow EU nation Greece: "Why doesn't Greece control its maritime half with Turkey?"

Greece, criticized for being ill-prepared as a first EU buffer against the migrants, decried the lack of EU solidarity.

Till today, it was difficult to find a solution, because a series of countries adopt a stance 'Not in my backyard," Tsipras said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Steps announced by Kerry do little to address deeper issues

John Kerry's latest Mideast mission has aimed for the modest goal of easing tensions around Jerusalem's most sensitive holy site — the focal point of more than a month of deadly unrest.

But the steps announced by the U.S. secretary of state over the weekend did little to address the deeper issues behind the fighting, raising fears that it is just a matter of time before another round of violence erupts.

Kerry announced the steps on Saturday after several days of meetings with Israeli, Palestinian and Jordanian leaders. The highlight was a Jordanian proposal to install surveillance cameras at the Jerusalem holy site that is known to Jews as the Temple Mount and to Muslims as the Noble Sanctuary.

More than a month of violence has been fuelled by Palestinian allegations that İsrael is trying to change the delicate status quo at the site, which allows non-Muslims to visit

The hilltop compound, home to the biblical Jewish Temples, is the holiest site in Judaism. Today, it is home to the Al-Aqsa Mosque compound, the third-holiest site in Islam.

Addressing his cabinet on Sunday, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he "made clear" to Kerry that Israel is committed to preserving the status quo, and he welcomed the plan to install cameras. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Death toll rises to 30 in bombing of hospital

The number of people killed when U.S. forces bombed a trauma hospital in northern Afghanistan earlier this month has risen to 30, the international medical charity Doctors Without Borders, which ran the clinic, said on Sunday.

The death toll includes "10 known patients, 13 known staff and seven unrecognizable bodies," the organization said. The clinic in Kunduz was bombed by U.S. forces on Oct. 3.

The charity said that the corpses were found in the debris of the destroyed hospital buildings.

The bombing happened as Afghan forces with U.S. air support battled to retake Kunduz from Taliban fighters who overran the city on Sept. 28. Two military inquiries and an Afghan government probe are investigating why the hospital was bombed.

The head of U.S. forces in Afghanistan, Gen. John F. Campbell has said the hospital was bombed by mistake after Afghan forces requested an air strike. President Barack Obama has apologized. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

17 killed, 71 injured in karaoke club fire

Seventeen people were killed in a fire that raced through a packed karaoke bar early Sunday on Indonesia's Sulawesi island, and 71 others were hospitalized for smoke inhalation.

Witnesses told authorities the fire started at around 1 a.m. on the second floor of the three-story building as hundreds of people were singing in private rooms at the Inul Vizta Karaoke club in downtown Manado, the capital of North Sulawesi province, said the city's police chief, Col. Rio

Workers were unable to put out the fire with extinguishers. It took firefighters several hours to bring the blaze under

"We are still investigating the cause of fire," Permana said, adding that a preliminary investigation indicated a short circuit.

He said some panicked people smashed windows and fled into the street, while many others were stuck in black smoke billowing from the second floor as there was only one access door to the building.

All 17 people who died were Indonesians. Most died from smoke inhalation rather than burns, Permana said.

TURKEY AND NORTHERN IRAO

16,000 flee persecution by Islamic State

In August 2014, the eyes of the world were fixed on Mount Sinjar, a sun-scorched mountain in northern Iraq, where thousands of Yazidis were besieged by Islamic State militants bent on killing, raping and enslaving them.

In the following months, horrifying stories emerged of women and girls who had managed to escape from IS. The militants boasted that rape and slavery were just punishments for "infidels" who belong to an ancient minority that does not fit their extreme definition of Islam

A year later, the world's focus has moved on to the Syrian refugee crisis that is overwhelming Europe's borders.

But in Iraqi Kurdistan, as well as refugee camps in Turkey, the traumatized Yazidi girls and women, and their relatives, are living in squalor, facing a second harsh winter with dwindling hope — and without the basic food, shelter and sanitation they need to sustain them.

Some families are still marooned on Mount Sinjar, surviving on their remaining sheep and whatever they can grow.

When Prime Minister elect Justin Trudeau takes office next month, one of the first petitions on his desk will be from Yazidi advocates, pleading for Canada, Australia and the U.S. to open their doors to about 16,000 refugees they say have suffered "genocide" and urgently need asylum.

The plea follows a UN human rights report, which said that the atrocities committed by the jihadists may amount to genocide. And last month advocacy groups Yazda and the Free Yezidi Foundation delivered a report to the International Criminal Court seeking recognition of the case as genocide.

An investigation into pos-

Canada should open its doors to the victims of genocide. And it should help those who are still in Iraq and hope to return to their destroyed homes one day.

sible genocide was launched this month by three European researchers who have documented Nazi war crimes, backed by the French foreign ministry. They are interviewing witnesses to atrocities and victims of IS kidnappings.

Murad Ismael, a founder of Yazda, the U.S.-based global advocacy organization for Yazidis, says the mission is crucial to alert the world because more than 3,000 women and children remain captive, "subject to systematic rape on a daily basis."

More than 80 per cent of the Yazidi population of northern Iraq is displaced and homeless in Kurdistan, and thousands more have fled the country in the hope of finding a safe haven. Some have died in the effort.

The Kurdistan Regional Government, which receives thousands of displaced Iraqi Sunnis and Syrians fleeing violence each week, says its capacity to support the millions now sheltering there is "exhausted." The UN has received only 41 per cent of the $500 million needed for essential programs, and health programs and food vouchers have been cut.

"When I went to the (Yazidi) camp all I saw was helplessness," says Ismael, who recently returned from Kurdistan. "People feel abandoned. The heat of summer and the storms have ruined their tents. Nobody is replacing them. One elderly woman in her 80s had a bed that was in the water.

"Many of the women who returned from captivity are in a desperate situation," Ismael adds. "Very few organizations are giving them support. They don't even have food or clothes — they can't buy socks for the winter."

Situation dire

Yazda has set up a primary medical care centre in northern Iraq that serves 500 displaced people a day, many former kidnap victims or survivors of slaughter from the attack on Mount Sinjar. But, Ismael says, even with a largely volunteer medical staff, "we don't have the $9,000 (US) a month we need to keep it going." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Haiti's former president Jean-Bertrand Aristide waves to supporters after casting his ballot at a polling station during presidential elections in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, on Sunday.

Partial results not expected for at least 10 days

Haitians faced lengthy ballots featuring 54 presidential hopefuls and a slew of legislative and municipal candidates Sunday as they selected leaders they hope can lift the nation out of chronic poverty and turbulence.

The presidential field was so crowded and confusing that there was little clarity about who might be leading as voting wrapped up in late afternoon. Pre-election polls were unreliable and contradictory, and no election results were expected for at least 10 days.

Voting was relatively orderly across the nation of some 10 million people, although there was some confusion and logistical problems.

At a voting centre in Portau-Prince's Martissant slum, an elections supervisor repeatedly yelled at dozens of people trying to force their way in. "No voting two times!" People shouted back that they were being prevented from voting once.

"I'm here to vote, and they are trying to stop me," complained Varnel Polycard, a vendor of phone chargers who walked away fuming. Each of Haiti's more than 120

Each of Haiti's more than 120 parties was allowed to send monitors to polling places, where they got their own voting done early. At a polling centre in the Petionville suburb of Port-au-Prince, monitors shoved one another in a voting line and masked police gave the unruliest partisans in line short zaps with a Taser.

But balloting was generally tranquil in many parts of the country, though there were sporadic reports of irregularities and roughly 70 arrests. Officials had no immediate estimate of national voter turnout.

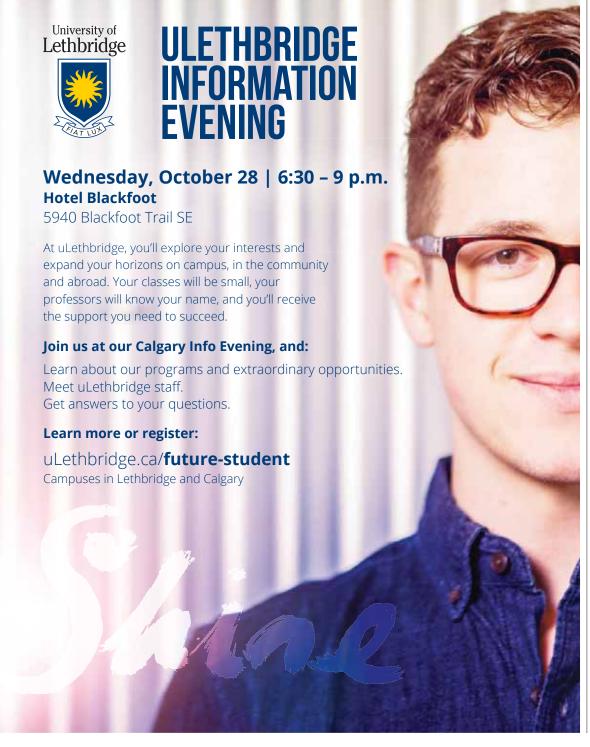

Celso Amorim, chief of the Organization of American States' 125-member observer mission, offered few specifics as polls closed but said Haiti appeared to be "moving in the right direction."

While the gritty district of Cite Soleil suffered from preelection violence, it appeared to have the busiest voting centre in the Port-au-Prince area.

"Nothing can scare me from trying to see my country develop and see if Haiti can get better for my grandchildren," Rosianne Jean said after casting her votes at a school in the deeply poor area of shacks and garbage-lined canals.

The continuing appeal of former president Jean-Bertrand Aristide was on display as more than 1,500 people greeted him when he arrived at a voting centre near his home, many chanting "Aristide is our blood."

The former leader has mostly been living quietly since returning to Haiti after seven years in exile following his 2004 ousting but has lately urged support for the candidate of the party he founded decades ago, Fanmi Lavalas. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHARING ECONOMY

Airbnb fights curbs in its home base

Travellers worldwide may love using Airbnb to book vacation stays, but the company that revolutionized home-sharing faces a hostile ballot measure in the city where it was founded. Proposition F on the Nov. 3 San Francisco ballot would limit short-term rentals to 75 days a year and require hosting companies such as Airbnb to yank listings that violate the limit.

The city would be required

Bruce Bennett, who rents out a room in the home he owns with his husband in San Francisco, says the money allows the couple to pay for emergency expenses.

to notify neighbours when a person registers to host. The measure would enable pricey lawsuit damages against violators, including the hosting platform.

Airbnb, by far the largest home-share platform in the city and in the world, has donated $8 million US and counting to defeat the proposed ordinance. It has saturated television with ads, even trying to sway voters last week with a botched billboard campaign reminding people of the hotel taxes its service collects.

Backers of the measure say the demand for vacation stays is sucking up scarce housing, adding to the city's unaffordability and destroying what makes San Francisco neighbourhoods unique.

Airbnb and other opponents argue the measure will pit neighbour against neighbour and drive out residents who can stay in the city only by sharing their homes short-term. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Oilpatch firms expected to report ugly third quarter

Oilsands producers report their quarterly earnings over the next few weeks - and industry watchers are under no illusion they'll be pretty. It's been about a year since the price of oil started its nosedive to below $50 US a barrel, and crude has been camping out at that level for months. The focus for investors will be less on the results themselves than on how the companies plan to cope. Martin Pelletier, portfolio manager at TriVest Wealth Counsel, said he'll be watching out for announcements that firms are looking at "strategic alternatives" — that could include divesting assets to pay down debt or putting a "for sale" sign on the whole company. Canada's copyright regime threatened

TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP

Activists look to Trudeau to defend current system

Copyright activists say Canadians could face lawsuits, fines or worse for ripping the latest Justin Bieber CD or uploading an animated GIF of Jose Bautista's bat-flip under a new trade deal, and they're calling on the newly elected Justin Trudeau to act.

A major part of the Trans-Pacific Partnership deal finalized Oct. 5 involves harmonizing copyright laws in the 12 Pacific Rim countries — including Canada, the United States, Australia and Japan — that are signatories to the deal. While the final text of the trade agreement has yet to be published, the website Wikileaks released what it claims is the intellectual property chapter of the TPP on Oct. 9.

'Canadians don't realize that the way that they use the Internet every day is going to change dramatically," said Meghan Sali, a spokeswoman for the digital-rights advocacy group OpenMedia.

The Electronic Frontier Foundation, an American advocacy group, has said the TPP threatens to override Canada's copyright regime and promotes the interests of copyright owners and corporations at the expense of the public.

Under Canada's current laws, ISPs and other companies that receive copyright complaints are only required to notify their users about the potential breach, and copyright holders must convince a court if they want the offending content removed.

Sali said the TPP deal could replace this so-called noticeand-notice system with the U.S. notice-and-takedown system, in which content is blocked or removed as soon as the first complaint is made.

The mayor should lead Uber's welcoming party

KINGKADE'S CALG Roger Kingkade

Now that the federal election is behind us, perhaps our politics geek-in-chief/mayor can cous on a pressing city matter that has a lot of Calgarians scratching their heads.

In 2010, Naheed Nenshi was elected as mayor of our fair burg. In 2013, he was enthusiastically returned to that office. But why?

Perhaps you don't recall

The cost of growth in Calgary is shedding allegiances to cartels that inhibit the enjoyment of this city.

that amazing election in 2010 when Ric McIver and Barb Higgins both vied for the mayor's chair only to be defeated by an inspirational candidate. Ric was the conservative alderman sure-shot. Barb was the celebrity. Naheed was the... the... other guy.

But Naheed Nenshi had a vision for this city that ran counter to the status quo. He campaigned on the hopes and dreams and aspirations of what Calgary could be. He respected the ambition of the electors and presented a vision in future tense, not past tense.

What's changed?
For as proud as we are of our mayor outside our city limits, we gave him the mandate because of the vision he had for our city going forward. We didn't think electing the first Muslim mayor of a major city in North America, a distinction more for the benefit of the chattering classes outside of Calgary, was the prime driving force for our choice.

Nenshi was elected to redirect this city. He campaigned on a vision. He was elected on that vision.

Along comes Uber.

Long is a winter night spent waiting for a taxi in Calgary. The complaints are so routine today that we don't consider them complaints anymore. Can't get a taxi when you're leaving the bar? That's the Calgary experience. Welcome to normal.

Uber has entered the market as a solution to this fiasco. Taxi service is part of the public transit infrastructure of any major city. City hall has not only inhibited the introduction of competitive car services, but has also threatened to penalize ride-sharing operators who would serve the taxpaying citizens of Calgary. It's absurd. If the city is beholden to one group of people above all those who pay for the very function of the city as an enterprise, they should come clean about it.

Mayor Nenshi must lead the charge on welcoming Uber into Calgary. If this is to the detriment of existing taxi services, he should be even more ecstatic about his role. He motivated voters to have conversations to "end the subsidy" to developers, imploring us to contemplate the real cost of growth. Now it's our turn to do the same.

The cost of growth in Calgary is shedding allegiances to cartels that inhibit the enjoyment of this city. Calgarians deserve Uber. They also deserve their elected champion of change to do what he was elected to do.

Roger Kingkade co-hosts the Kingkade and Breakenridge show every weekday morning from 9 a.m. to noon on NewsTalk 770.

Every year when fall comes calling, I need to eat everything

Maybe your day also started like this.

Breakfast: grapefruit and a pumpkin muffin. Apple for elevenses. Soup for lunch, salad for second lunch, second muffin for afternoon snack, granola bar for early evening snack, a plum, the last coq au vin leftovers for dinner, one-quarter of a bag of Applewood Smoked BBQ potato chips for after-dinner snack and for dessert: six pieces of sea-salted milk chocolate. There might have been a mandarin orange in there, but I can't quite recall.

You can understand why. Each year, the fall comes along, and I seem to want to eat it. The only acceptable eat it. The only acceptable time to not be eating appears to be when I'm asleep.

This time, I stopped to wonder what odd compulsive reflex has come over me. So I looked it up. Turns out some studies have shown that we do indeed consume more calories when the days get darker and colder.

We — not just me — seasonally overeat. The why appears up for debate. Maybe we have a bear-like urge to store calories. Maybe we're sucked into the flavours and gluttony that seem synonymous with the season

I'm actually not, it turns out, too concerned about the why. Having seen that there is a) a definite human trend here and b) some possible answers, I'm satisfied. Information-ally speaking. And I like both answers.

If it's the first, then it's a function of my biology — and sure, I could exert some extra self-control, but if I don't, I've got company among the masses.

If it's the second, then I'm only responding to the gravitational pull of cinnamon, cumin and red wine, bacon in my stews, extra butter on toast and extra cream in tomato soup.

By drawing me to food, the fall draws me into my kitchen, for hours, half the weekend, the whole weekend, pouring over recipes for Vietnamese lemongrass beef stew, beef bourguignon or a Burmese curry. The sunny, chilly day is best spent strolling in and out of small grocers and butchers and bulk shops, then home again to watch light from the window slowly crawl across the wall.

Stowing away, and letting the hours pass in the many voices coming from the radio and the heat of the oven.

Sinking into food — the creative, aromatic and physical pleasures of making and tasting it — is an autumn gift.

Eat up.

We — not just me — seasonally overeat. The why appears to be up for debate.

Scaring Springfield for 26 years

THE SIMPSONS

A countdown of the show's best Halloween specials

Brian GasparekFor Metro Canada

Our favourite citizens of Springfield got to unleash their yearly dose of horror, sci-fi and supernatural spoofing Sunday night — The Simpsons annual Halloween special, Treehouse of Horror.

This year's edition of the spooktacular was highlighted by a segment featuring Springfield's most sinister villain, Sideshow Bob, finally accomplishing his life goal of obliterating Bart Simpson...just for the episode.

In honour of 26 years of Simpsons Halloween tradition and Bob's landmark achievement, we thought we would rank the top seven most memorable Treehouse of Horror segments of all time. Ready to relive the terror and hilarity?

The Homer segment from 1995's Treehouse of Horror episode was so good. In a spoof of The Twilight Zone's classic Little Lost Girl episode, we got to witness Homer Simpson accidentally turning 3D and getting trapped in the real world. The nerdy quantum physics jokes were good, but seeing Homer walking amongst us was even better.

Treehouse of Horror V: The Shinning spoofed Stanley Kubrick's classic film. CONTRIBUTED

Treehouse of Horror XIX: It's the Grand Pumpkin, Milhouse (2008)

If The Simpsons was going to spoof It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown, it had to be classic. And it was. In the standout segment from 2008's Treehouse of Horror special, The Simpsons' Peanuts parody wasn't only cute, it was gory and hilarious too. As a nice touch, it also featured Vince Guaraldi's classic Charlie Brown music.

Treehouse of Horror III: Clown Without A Pity Clown Without A Pity from 1992's Treehouse of Horror was not only excellent, it was legitimately terrifying too. The segment spoofed another Twilight Zone classic, Living Doll. Homer brought home a cursed, murderous Krusty The Clown doll as a birthday present for Bart, and the tiny toy attempts to murder him. You can't really blame Homer though...the doll did come with free frogurt.

Treehouse of Horror V: Time And Punishment (1994)

In 1994's hilarious Time In Punishment segment (a spoof on Ray Bradbury's A Sound of Thunder), Homer taught us that if a time machine toaster ever transports us back to prehistoric time, never, ever step on anything. It will change the future as we know it. In all fairness, donut rainstorms don't sound too bad. This was a great one.

Treehouse of Horror IV: The Devil And Homer Simpson (1993)

In this awesome spoof of Stephen Vincent Benét's The Devil and Daniel Webster, Homer wants a donut so bad that he sells his soul to the devil. Satan, who happens to be Simpson's peppy, super-Christian neighbour Ned Flanders, gets mad when our favourite animated dad tries to skip out on the deal. Ned memorably transforms Homer's head into a giant donut...and Simpson proceeds to nibble at it. It's one of the standout images from the Treehouse of Horror series.

Treehouse of Horror VII: Citizen Kang (1996)

1996's Treehouse of Horror segment Citizen Kang acted as a brilliant spoof on mid-'90s American politics. In an effort to take over the planet, sinister aliens Kang and Kodos abducted Bill Clinton and Bob Dole, and posed as them for them for the presidential election

Not surprisingly, their ridiculous sounding promises and policies weren't too far off from the real candidates'. It was classic.

Treehouse of Horror V: The Shinning (1994)

It only makes sense that a parody of one of the best, most terrifying movies of all time inspired the best Treehouse of Horror segment ever made. The Shinning was a hilarious spoof on the classic Kubrick flick The Shining. It was spooky, hilarious and a solid Halloween homage.

THREE THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW

1. It almost ended after its third installment

Treehouse of Horror III was so poorly received after its initial internal screening that it had to undergo over 100 line changes. Executive producers AI Jean and Mike Reiss considered scrapping the annual series after that installment, but were overruled.

2. The series was initially inspired by EC Comics

EC Comics, the publisher responsible for printing the famous horror series Tales From the Crypt as well as scifi publications Weird Fantasy and Weird Science was the original inspiration for Treehouse of Horror I.

3. Simpsons writers were worried it was too scary

Remember how the first five Treehouse specials opened with disclaimers warning viewers about the spooks that were about to transpire? They were added to the top of each special because the writers thought their audience would be scared and put off by the departure from standard episodes. The disclaimers were dropped after Treehouse of Horror V.

CEOs ditch the jargon to connect with employees

"Emails like this are usually riddled with corporate speak so I'm going to give it to you straight," wrote Twitter ČEO Jack Dorsey in an all-staff memo delivered early last week - during which he announced that 336 employees would be laid off as part of a company-wide restructuring.

He said downsizing was essential to produce a "streamlined road map" for Twitter's brands. When revealing the actual layoffs — in the fourth paragraph of the email — he said Twitter planned to "part ways" with workers whose roles were no longer necessary to achieve the company's vision. It may not be incomprehensible business babble — but it's not straight-shooting, either.

At just under 350 words, Dorsey's email is relatively short compared to other high-profile layoff notices. In the summer of 2014, Microsoft's then-executive vice president of devices and services Stephen Elop made headlines when he sent staff a jargon-padded disaster that buried the crux of his dispatch - that 12,500 jobs were getting cut - under 1,100 words of pseudo-inspirational techindustry gibberish.

Dorsey's email is more to the point — and more appreciative of his staff's efforts. However, it doesn't so much avoid corporate speak as disguise corporate speak beneath a we're-all-friends-here veneer.

Fading are the days when the big boss sequestered him or herself in their own wing of a soulless office tower. Today's most famous CEOs are average Joes — albeit very, very rich average Joes - who dress casually, give rousing conference talks, and speak to staff like they're buds. So Dorsey's email might represent a new type of boss-talk: one in which the higher-ups soften their emphasis on the bottom line by making employees feel like they're in the inner circle. Sure, you got fired - but who can feel resentful when the boss is such a cool guy?

Key point: the laid-off staffers aren't on the inside. They're being given a handshake, a healthy severance package, and the boot. On a day-to-day basis, a shift to relatable CEOs may make workers feel less like minions and more empowered. But Dorsey's message could also serve as a (literally) friendly reminder of how language, even when outlining painful reductions, can still create distance between the leader and the cutbacks - not through unintelligible corporate prattle, but by articulating a gentler image of those on the higher rungs. At least he didn't use hashtags.

Doorman start-up: no more missed packages

After amassing $1.5 million in seed funding earlier this summer, start-up Doorman is now live in Chicago and preparing a New York launch, too.

Based in San Francisco, the company announced on Friday that it has gone live in the Windy City.

With more and more people opting to order anything and everything online, but work and life schedules resulting in many a missed package, Doorman offers a solution: it signs for and holds users' packages at a warehouse, also called a "Doorman address." Clients can then schedule their packages' delivery between 6 p.m. and midnight, seven days a week.

Doorman charges $3.99 for the service. AFP

Track where your money goes and see more in pocket

Gail Vaz-Oxlade For Metro Canada

If you've been keeping track of where your money goes, you may be surprised at how often you buy coffee, gum, a midafternoon snack. How about how often you go into shoe stores, tool stores, restaurants for lunch? See what a spending journal does? It makes you aware of where your money is going. (If you haven't started using one yet, all you need is a notebook and pen, and the will.)

Someone smart said, "Insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results."

Tired of being financially insane? Ready to make some changes?

If you've been unware about where your money goes for quite some time, it's probably going to take some effort to develop new habits.

Don't get impatient with yourself. Impatience will only distract you from the task at hand. You have, after all, a lot to learn.

You have to:

- Distinguish between "needs" and "wants"
- Communicate with your friends and family about your new awakening and the changes you'll be making
- Recognize the impact marketing and advertising has on you, and resolve not to be influenced • Create a balanced budget and track your expenses on a daily
- or weekly basis
 Recognize the importance of saving both for emergencies and for the long term
- Do the hard work it will take to come up with a debt repayment plan and then execute that plan
- Learn to see not only today's immediate needs, but to plan for things you will need and want in the future
- Lead by example: show your children how to take charge of their money so they don't end up making the same mistakes you did

 Be willing to seek help if you feel overwhelmed or become lost along the way.

Change is never easy. Most people hate change. There will be times when you fall off the rails. You'll lose track of a receipt and kick yourself. You'll skip the comparison-shopping because you just didn't have time. Or you'll buy something that's not in your budget because, well, you just did.

You're only human, so you're bound to make mistakes. The key is to right your rocky boat quickly and tack back on track. It is also important — if you want the change to stick — that you be able to identify at least one benefit you'll gain by changing how you deal with your money.

If you can hold that idea front and centre in your mind — if you know what's really important to you — you're much more likely to stick to the new game plan.

Search for small-town serenity

Young families are fleeing the city and suburbs for a slower life

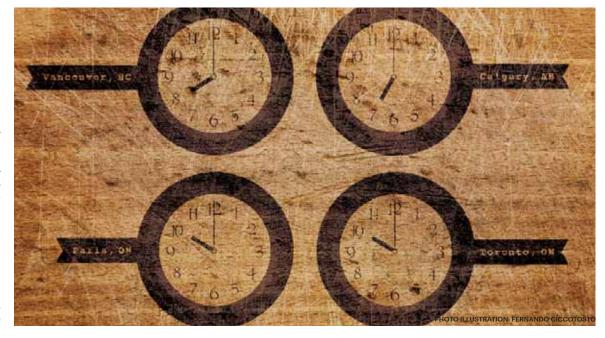

Megan Haynes For Metro Canada

Cassie McDaniel, 32, and her husband couldn't imagine raising a child in their small Toronto apartment. So when they had a baby, they decided to move. But the pair didn't stop when they hit Etobicoke, Mississauga or even Hamilton. Instead, they opted to buy in the quaint town of Paris, Ont., population 11,000.

It was a bit of an adjustment for the pair, who had to say goodbye to conveniently located ethnic food options and more than a few friends, she says.

But McDaniel, design director for Mozilla who works remotely, says they were attracted to the town for its burgeoning art and design community, as well as Paris' picturesque qualities, and since the move, she's met a number of other young people opting to ditch the city for smalltown charm. While conventional wisdom says millennials (those born between 1977 and 1995) want to live in cities, the high cost of housing, increased opportunities to work from home and exported city-like amenities (such as cute coffee shops, fashion houses and hip pubs) are driving some millentials out of the core. Out of the suburbs even.

The cohort is increasingly choosing to live in small rural towns, on farms or even in cabins in the woods. The same things that drove this cohort to the cities is driving them to small rural towns, says Leigh Gallagher, author of The End of the Suburbs. The car-dependent, sterile suburb, where the majority of today's Gen Y grew up, holds little appeal. Today's young adults want to be close to the action, she says.

"They want to be steps away to some kind of downtown where you can get your pour-over coffee, see friends or a show," she says. They don't want to be bored, and suburbs are boring."

In cities, that means increased demand, and prices, for homes, which means younger adults are being priced out of the market. A recent study by Angus Reid found 45 per cent 18- to 34-year-olds were seriously considering leaving Toronto because of the high cost of housing.

Going rural is also a rejection of the trend of trying to cram more people than ever in increasingly smaller space, says Gallagher. Today, the average condo is 797 square feet, down from 925 a few years ago, according to RealNet Canada. And that doesn't take into account the bevy of micro condos set to open over the next few years. Millennials are being physically crowded out of the market.

After 11 years in Toronto, Douglas Paton, 35, says he and his wife were "done" with crowded city living. When his wife decided to pursue a career in the wine industry, the pair moved to Summerland, B.C., population 11,250, 25 minutes away from Kelowna. As a writer Paton can work anywhere, and having grown up in a small town, he says the isolation is a welcome change from the throngs of people.

While Summerland doesn't have much in the way of hip, millennial-desirable amenities, the proximity to Kelowna, population 106,710, means he is never left wanting.

That said, while many millennials romanticize this simpler country living, it's not always easy to live in small rural towns.

Driven out of Vancouver due to high housing prices, Serena McCarroll, 40, and her partner moved to Bruno, Sask. to open a small art collective/coffee shop. But a lack of driver's licence and the uncertainty of business meant McCarroll was often alone while her partner found work outside of the town of 500. While she went in knowing it might be lonely in a new town where nobody knows you, yet everybody does - people were untrusting of strangers and didn't rally behind the art collective/coffee shop concept - McCarroll says she under estimated how isolating it would be.

In the end, she fell into depression before deciding to pursue her masters at Ryerson so she could go "get to the biggest city possible," she says.

Back in Paris, on a pictureperfect fall afternoon sitting in the Brown Dog coffee shop along the vibrant tree-lined banks of the Grand River, it's hard not to romanticize a quieter life.

Inside, it's bustling, the gourmet food shop owners talk about the uptick in tourists coming for Paris' "famous cheeses," and there's a buzz of excitement over a new co-working and maker space going up in an old mill. Downtown Paris is where the action is.

"(It's) definitely a more slowed down, rural existence, but (these small towns) have the connection (to) and the same amenities as the cities," says Gallagher.

"What I think is lost in the argument (about the end of suburbs) is millennials are perfectly happy being in the right kind of rural area with a cool downtown."

Girardi scores tiebreaking marker in Rangers win

The start of this season has not been seamless for Dan Girardi and the New York Rangers.

After 10 games, both the player and team hope their games are rounding into shape.

"He's coming along," New York coach Alain Vigneault said after Girardi broke a tie late in the second period in New York's 4-1 win over the Calgary Flames.

SUNDAY In New York

Girardi passed Mark Messier for 10th on the Rangers' career games played list.

"It was our third game in four nights," Vigneault said. "We were able to find our rhythm in the second half of the game.'

Oscar Lindberg, Kevin Klein and Derick Brassard also scored. The Rangers (6-2-2) have won three of their last five and earned points in all five games.

"Our record is really good," Girardi said. "But at the same time, we know in here that maybe one or two games we played a 60-minute game really hard. I think you need to find a way to get that 60-minute to-back sets this season — it lost to the Flyers in a shootout Saturday night. The Rangers have won six of their past seven against the Flames.

In his 769th game with New York, Girardi scored his first goal this season to put the Rangers ahead 2-1 with 3:03 left in the second. Recently demoted to the third defence pairing with Keith Yandle, Girardi snuck down to the right circle and snapped a rebound of Emerson Etem's shot past season debut for Calgary after being called up from AHL Stockton. He skated on a line with Josh Jooris and Sam Bennett ... Michael Ferland is week-toweek with an MCL sprain.

"It just popped right to my stick," Girardi said. "I just got it away as fast as I could. Luckily it went in."

Jiri Hudler scored the Flames' lone goal.

Hiller stopped 17 of 21 shots before being replaced by Joni Ortio late in the third period. Ortio made five saves as Calgary fell to 2-6-0. The Flames have lost five of their last seven

"We've got to find a way to win," Matt Stajan said. "We're not scoring enough goals."

Girardi's goal was his 200th point in the NHL and Etem's first point as a Ranger. In 10 games against Calgary, Girardi has three goals and five assists.

New York did not score on either of its man advantages, but it also killed both of Calgary's first-period power plays. The Rangers have killed 17 straight penalties over their last six games.

"We couldn't get a go-ahead goal and the cushion on them," Flames coach Bob Hartley said. "I'd like to see (the Flames) rewarded because I thought we worked hard.

Hamilton retains F1 title

Lewis Hamilton seized on a late mistake by Mercedes teammate Nico Rosberg to win the United States Grand Prix and secure his third Formula One season championship.

Hamilton overtook Rosberg with eight laps to go when Rosberg locked his tires and helplessly watched his teammate zoom past.

The win also gives Hamilton his 21st victory over two seasons and 10th this year. He is the first Formula One driver to win 10 or more races in consecutive seasons. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Logano wins at Talladega

Joey Logano used a controversial finish at Talladega Superspeedway to sweep the second round of NASCAR's playoffs and end Dale Earnhardt Jr.'s championship chances.

The race ended under caution when reigning Sprint Cup champion Kevin Harvick stumbled on the final restart to trigger a multi-car accident in the middle of the field. Because NASCAR said this week it would make just one attempt to finish the race under the green flag, the field was frozen and Earnhardt was denied the chance to race Logano for the win. Jets hang on for Wild finish the second period turned out to be the difference as the Winnipeg Jets held off a late Minnesota comeback and beat the Wild 5-4

Stafford snapped a shot from the top of the faceoff circle past goaltender Darcy Kuemper 51 seconds into the second period for a three-goal lead. Kuemper was replaced by Devan Dubnyk, who saw Stafford add his second of the game at the 4:34 mark of the period to make it

5-1 Winnipeg. Andrew Ladd, Bryan Little and Nikolaj Ehlers had the other goals for the Jets (5-2-1). Ladd and Little each added an assist while Blake Wheeler had two helpers to extend his points streak to setting a new franchise record. Stafford has a team-leading five goals this season.

Jets goaltender Michael Hutchinson was solid after allowing the first goal of the game to Wild forward Jason Zucker 10 seconds into the contest. Hutchinson stopped 26 shots for his third win this season.

Mikko Koivu, Justin Fontaine and Zach Parise also scored for Minnesota (5-2-1).

Argos' QB Ray to make first start after long injury stint

Toronto quarterback Ricky Ray will make his first start of the season when the Argonauts host the B.C Lions next Friday. Argos head coach Scott Milanovich made the announcement Sunday.

Ray came into the game for starter Trevor Harris in Toronto's lopsided 34-2 loss to Montreal on Friday at Tim Hortons Field. He completed 12 of his 15 pass attempts for 94 yards and had a late touchdown toss negated by a penalty.

Harris stepped in admirably as Toronto's starter after Ray underwent off-season shoulder surgery, then struggled to find consistency upon his return. The Argos compiled a 9-7 record and secured a playoff spot with Harris under centre despite playing just three games at Rogers Centre due to scheduling conflicts.

Australia into World Cup final

Adam Ashley-Cooper's third try set up by a brilliant run from Drew Mitchell secured Australia's 29-15 win over Argentina and its spot in the Rugby World Cup final against rival New Zealand on Sunday.

Australia and the Kiwis have each won the World Cup twice — the All Blacks in '87 and in 2011, each time on home soil, and the Wallabies won in 1991 and '99, both times in Britain.

Star man Brady makes two late TD passes to rob Jets of win

The fourth quarter started just in time for Tom Brady to overcome some early drops and lead the Patriots on a comeback. And it ended just in time for New England to hold on for a victory.

Brady overcame New England's shaky first three quarters by throwing for a pair of touchdowns in the fourth, and the Patriots defeated the New York Jets 30-23 on Sunday to remain unbeaten. The Super Bowl MVP completed 14 of 17 passes in the final quarter to overcome a 20-16 deficit and give New England (6-0) a two-game lead over the Jets in the AFC East.

"I thought we played better as the game went on," said Brady, who was 34 of 54 for 355 yards overall — numbers that would have been even better if not for SUNDAY in Foxborough the 11 drops by his receivers, six by newly activated Brandon La-Fell. "We made the plays when we needed to make them," Brady added. "I think that was the important thing."

The Jets (4-2) rallied in the final minute, kicking a field goal on first down with 23 seconds left to get within one score before Brandon Marshall recovered the onside kick. But after a short pass over the middle to Eric Decker left the Jets 37 yards away from tying the game, Marshall failed to get set on Ryan Fitzpatrick's spike to stop the clock; the false-start penalty ended it.

"I feel like we had them," offensive lineman Willie Colon said. "I feel like we were the better team out there."

Aries March 21 - April 20 Be careful how you react to criticism today because if you let rivals see that your feelings are hurt they will take advantage of it. This is still a good time for getting things done. Don't let anyone burst your bubble.

Taurus April 21 - May 21 You may find it hard to treat others as your intellectual equals but pretend you take what they say seriously. And check your facts. The approaching full moon in your sign warns you could make a fool of yourself.

I Gemini May 22 - June 21 Do not get discouraged just because there is still a yawning gap between your dreams and your reality. Throw yourself into an activity.

Cancer June 22 - July 23 You won't hesitate to speak your mind but be careful. Tomorrow's full moon warns if you stray too far from the facts you could be the one who is the topic of conversation - and what others say won't be pleasant!

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23 Don't say or do anything that might meet the disapproval of people in power. Believe in yourself and that belief can take you far, but the fact is your rivals are more powerful than you are.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23 If you tread on someone's toes the consequences could be painful for both of you. Minor differences could escalate, so avoid slinging insults.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23. Act as if you care about what is going on around you, even if you don't. Although other people's struggles may not be your struggles you will only get where you want to go if you pretend they are

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22 You are rarely afraid to be controversial but watch out you don't go too far and make an enemy of someone who is more than a match for you. Be careful what you say Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 You may be impatient to get things done but take care that in your haste you don't neglect the needs of those you love. Don't turn people against you just because you are in a hurry.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 You may not be able to do much for yourself as the new week begins but you can help a friend or colleague overcome a problem. In doing so you may even discover why you have been stuck in the doldrums.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19 A change is necessary and although it won't be easy, it must be done. Don't feel bad that others are not as committed to change. In the longterm it will be good for them too.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20 The approaching full moon demands that you must be totally honest with yourself about what it is you desire and what it is you will have to do to get it.
